

CATRD's Spring Seminar

Thursday, March 22, 2018

Ashlar Village, Wallingford

A Cognitive Approach to Managing Behaviors and Increasing Meaningful Engagement

SEMINAR INFORMATION

Program Description:

The following saying is fairly common in the field of geriatrics: when cognition goes down, behavior problems go up. While this adage is by no means always true, it is the case that behavioral issues are common in persons with cognitive impairment. For this reason, it is important to look at behaviors through a cognitive lens. This presentation will start with an overview of the dementing illnesses and the general progression down the cognitive continuum, from normal age-related changes to mild cognitive impairment to dementia. Next, the behavioral and psychological symptoms that occur as a result of the cognitive decline will be explored. The practical application of cognitive assessment as a pathway to person-centered care will be described in detail. Specific, evidence-based interventions for cognitive rehabilitation, behavior management and meaningful engagement will be highlighted. Participants will leave with a deeper understanding of how cognitive changes impact a person's ability to act and interact with those around them. As a result of the deeper understanding, participants will leave feeling better equipped to interpret behavior as a means of communication and engage with people who are cognitively impaired.

Learning Objectives: By the end of the seminar, participant will:

1. Identify the statistical prevalence of dementia in skilled nursing and assisted living facilities
2. Differentiate between the major subtypes of dementia and the defining features and behavioral correlates of each
3. Describe what is meant by "The Cognitive Continuum"
4. Summarize the three primary clusters of Behavioral and Psychological Symptoms of Dementia (BPSD)
5. Review the importance of cognitive assessment as a guiding force for behavior management
6. Give examples of at least three different triggers for behavioral disturbances in people with dementia
7. Distinguish between meaningful, purposeful and passive engagement
8. Explain the rationale behind cognitive-based activities as interventions for problematic behaviors

SPEAKER:

Dr. Melissa Tanner, Ph.D. is a clinical psychologist specializing in the integration of assessment with clinical practice. She received her BA in psychology from Harvard University in 2003 and her PhD in clinical psychology from American University in 2011. Her doctoral research involved the exploration of the effects of meditation and other behavioral approaches on mood, cognition and physical health variables. As a BCAT faculty member, she is taking a leading role in the development of a verbal practical judgment instrument. Dr. Tanner balances her role as BCAT faculty member with that of CounterPoint Health Services clinician. In her role as clinician, she uses cognitive assessment to effectively cater psychological interventions to patients in rehabilitation and long-term care settings and to help facilities make treatment planning decisions.
